

PRISONER RELEASE OF LIABILITY

Personal property retained in the possession of a prisoner is the responsibility of the individual. The Department of Corrections shall not be responsible for the repair or replacement of retained personal property lost, stolen, damaged or destroyed. Furthermore, in the absence of negligence the department shall not be liable for damage to personal property which may result from staff inspection of such property, notwithstanding any other provisions in this form. If the personal property is a computer, the prisoner agrees that the State of Alaska, Department of Corrections and State employees and contractors are not responsible for any loss or damage of the work product stored on the computer or computer disks. When a prisoner is required to relinquish control of personal property to the department, the department shall become responsible for safekeeping of the property.

Description of Item(s):

I have read this release and I agree not to hold the State of Alaska or its employees responsible for those items of personal property which I voluntarily bring into the institution for my personal use while incarcerated.
